AREAS OF TEACHING AND RESEARCH

My research and teaching are dedicated to an interdisciplinary approach to the social, cultural, and political intersections of Native American, United States, and international history, grounded in Indigenous research methods, decolonizing methodologies, and community-engaged teaching and learning. With a specific focus on international Indigenous activism, social justice, and human rights regarding sovereignty, cultural heritage, traditional knowledge, and intellectual property rights, as well as the legal, ethical, and societal implications of research with Indigenous communities.

Areas: United States modern, Native American, American West history, with a specific emphasis on Indigenous research methods, decolonizing methodologies, and social movements.
