Professional Projects

The Catalyst Journalism Project. A research, teaching and service initiative that brings together investigative reporting and solutions journalism to spark action and response to our most perplexing issues. To date, our project has received more than $425,000 in external grant funding (with Brent Walth, UO).

BLOG: Visual Communication in the Digital Age. My blog is the ideal venue with which to present my scholarship at a more democratic level. I also comment on professional practice in visual communication, covering such timely and critical topics as photojournalism, image manipulation, pictorial stereotypes, graphic images, data visualization, social media, advertising and public relations campaigns, and the like. My blog has steady traffic from across the globe and it often precipitates good dialogue with scholars, professionals, and students.
